Clearmout, Fla.

The general level of Clearmout clay at Fort Harrison Cove is not more than 30' above present sea level. It is the old Pleistocene sea bottom. At about 20'-25' above sea level is a wide spread shell bed replete with large gastropods. Near the corner of Oscar La Gore and Fernandina Street (to fish pier) is the place where I made my collection. From Fort Harrison Cove west to the bluff there are at least four terraces or slopes. The shells appear to be concentrated due to weathering and erosion carrying away the sand and leaving the heavier shells behind.

Before the Cortes commenced, there was very little progress made, and it was discovered that it was difficult to get the work done. Hidden among the crowd, it was introduced and it became more and more evident and began to grow.

The stratified Cortes attempted to merge into the stratified material, but it was against due to the high speed of the stratified body. The message arrived at the stratified body, changing the dynamic or gravity.

The final effect was a great change and the stratified body was in danger of the thickening of its body. Over a short period, it was thought to carry out a balance.

The stratified material blends with the plain body, that is why it is the center of the theory of this age.

Left Boston before 10 A.M.,
headed for Bar Harbor, Maine.
Boat to Bangor 6:45 P.M. P.O.
U.S. at the old Lamplough Hotel.
Good weather day.

Saturday June 22, 1930

Rainy morning. Dined at Bangor Hotel all morning.
After lunch packed up and left for Bar Harbor when we put in at 3:30 P.M. at the Central House, 60 Cottage st run by Mrs. Cora M. Hodgkins.
It cleared up by the time we got to Bar Harbor, but much fog and climb at the top of Cadillac Mt, 15 47' on the edge
To get a better view or will return to Cadillac on the morning.

Sunday June 23 1935
At 9:15 am we are off to the top of Cadillac Mt. Still some fog out to sea and now some of the islands are like a hazy. Still we thought we could discern MT. Katahdin, but not the White Mt.

Bonnie finds the granite from the very top of Cadillac.
Farther down the Mt road encountered three tong basalt dikes, then the sharp turn on road. The three dikes are well defined on both sides of the road. One dike is \( \frac{1}{2} \) ft. across and another straight across the granite (has a piece). The intermediate dike is split into very irregular modes; one side has 15\( ^{\circ} \) of basalt, then 12\( ^{\circ} \) of altered granite, and 12\( ^{\circ} \) of basalt. The 109th 00 is half mile north and decline over in fault to the right. Some are half mile across. Have a piece of the granite here. The compacted piece of the granite served to form a dike. It is new to dikes, and mostly altered basalt,
June 23 - 1935

Started from Cadillac Mt. at 10:00 and at 1:15 stopped at Rockport in the Red Hotel for lunch. Then motored down the main road to Pemaquid Point to Rockland. From there to east on the island road to Harbor with its luminous pines, and at a curve I made Charon said to stop me to the town - Ledge. Then motored on the left road coming out at Booth and Portland, Maine. Put up at the Langfellow Inn on East Pavement.
June 24, 1935
